Pacific Waif Pal of Marines, Now Growing Up

SING POIE — The wonder waif of the Pacific is almost grown up now. She's 12 years old.

Patsy Li, the little Chinese girl who six years ago mysteriously turned up in the midst of the war on Guadalcanal, is studying in a Singapore school.

But she hasn't forgotten her days with the United States marines on Guadalcanal. She hasn't had a chance. Nearing grows up and down the coast have kept the memory alive for her.

Little Patsy, like many a younger her age, is limelight-conscious. But in her case this threatens to become a serious personality problem, according to her guardian. That's why there are to be no more interviews.

A lot of American marines who were on Guadalcanal will remember Patsy and with her happily over the rocky road of adolescence.

Sick With Malaria.

They will remember her as the 6-year-old: very sick with malaria, who one day in the heat of battle was carried by natives to the American lines. She had been found, wounded and very ill, in an abandoned Japanese camp.

The marines adopted her and she became famous as "Patsy of Guadalcanal."

Patsy had been separated from her mother, Mrs. Ruth Li of Singapore, when the invasion which they were escaping from Malaya was torpedoed off the Netherlands East Indies in February, 1942. Mrs. Li was rescued. No trace was found of her child at the time.

Three thousand miles from the scene of the sinking, on Guadalcanal an American correspondent wrote up the story of the little Chinese girl.

Sister Reads Story.

In New York, Mrs. Ruth Li's sister, a cancer research worker, read the story and noted that the little girl answered to the name of Patsy Li—the name of the little niece she lost in the torpedoing off the Dutch East Indies. She wrote to her sister.

It was a clew—and the mother flew to the orphanage in the New Hebrides where the girl had been placed and recognized Patsy as her missing daughter.

How she traveled the 3,000 miles from the place where the ship went to Guadalcanal, nobody knows. Probably the Japanese fished her out of the sea, adopted her and brought her with them to Guadalcanal. It's still a mystery to everyone, including Patsy.

Today in Singapore a growing-up Patsy often asks: "Daddy, you ever met an American marine? They're wonderful!"

Beagle Hound's Trail Leads Detectives to Confusion

DES MOINES, IA.—Two policemen who used a beagle hound in a small scale manhunt reported that the dog was no detective, but certainly was friendly.

The brown and white dog was found in a used car lot where a thief escaped under police gunfire. Detectives assumed that the hound belonged to the thief. They decided to turn the dog loose and follow it.

The dog merely joined the crowd which had gathered at the car lot and wandered around wagging its tail. Finally a detective swatted the uneager beagle with a folded newspaper.

The hound took off but in its ramblings it: Almost got hit by a car; was chased by a lady with a pitchfork; was pinned down in a tangle with an unfriendly larger dog, and wandered in circles.

Police decided that the beagle merely was fooling at the scene of the crime. They called off the hunt.

"I've trailed lots of people," commented Lt. Ted Strassburg with resignation. "But this was the first time I'd been assigned to trail a dog."

Branded Hand Tells Story Of Arrested Slave Stealer

MUSKEGON, MICH. — A monument near the entrance to Evergreen cemetery here recalls a man branded by court order.

The memorial bears a replica of the right hand of Capt. Jonathan Walker, with the initials SS, for "slave stealer," on the palm.

Walker is believed the only person ever branded by a federal court order.

Walker was arrested in 1844 off the coast of Key West, Fla., while taking seven runaway slaves to the Bahama islands and freedom.

He already had a price on his head for numerous anti-slavery deeds. Many slaves escaped to Mexico with his help.

The court, therefore, was severe. Walker was fined, sentenced to a year's solitary confinement and branded.

In 1846, John Greenleaf Whittier immortalized Walker in his poem, "The Branded Hand."

After the Civil war, the colorful captain retired to Lake Harbor, near Muskegon. He died there April 30, 1878.

Planting of Windbreak Will Improve Farmstead

Ranked as a major farmstead improvement project, planting of a windbreak around farm buildings not only improves the appearance of the farm but also saves fuel and gives wind protection to the building and livestock.

In addition to the regular windbreak on the north and west of the farmstead, many farmers also are planting a garden windbreak on the south and west of the garden.

Frequent Bedding Change Needed by Dog With Fleas

A change of the dog's bedding every time the family's bed linen is changed would bring relief to millions of flea-pestered dogs, according to authorities on pet health.

Dogs that are bathed regularly and treated scientifically to remove fleas still may be troubled by these parasites if owners neglect to change their pets' bedding at frequent intervals, says American Veterinary Medical association's committee on small animal diseases.

Fleas deposit their eggs in the dog's sleeping place, where the eggs hatch and go through the larval stage. By a complete change of bedding at least once a week, fleas in the process of development can be eliminated.

Use of a thin film of DDT powder on the bedding also is helpful, the committee says. Bedding removed from the dog's sleeping quarters can be used again after it has been washed thoroughly and placed outside to dry.

Cotton as an Insulator

When the department of agriculture found a method for flameproofing cotton eight years ago, primary use for the new insulating material was in homes. From that one use, cotton insulation now has spread to more than a score of new fields. Diesel locomotive manufacturers find the product from southern farms the most efficient for insulating cabs, while other railroad equipment manufacturers are using the fleecy material in refrigerator and passenger cars. Cold drink boxes, hot water heaters, prefabricated houses and refrigerated trucks use hundreds or thousands of pounds of cotton insulation each year. One of the most novel uses is in a "coffee hot," a hat-shaped device which keeps coffee hot for two hours when placed over the coffee-maker.

Home Sewing on Increase

With clothing costs at an all-time high and with the constantly changing fashions, more and more homemakers are turning to their sewing machines. Figures show that the number of women making many of their clothes has increased more than 130 per cent over five years ago. These women are not making simple aprons and housedresses, but are going in for current fashion, and they are buying the best materials available.

Those who sew at home find many of the new styles easy to duplicate. The ballerina skirt and the flare-back bell-shaped coat are readily copied by beginning seamstresses. The amount of patterns sold at pattern counters is more than double the number sold before the war. Sewing machines are selling almost as fast as they can be manufactured—with an actual increase of at least 200 per cent during the past 10 years.

Heart Attack for Dogs

Owners of dogs are advised that allowing them to chase speeding cars is not conducive to a long or healthy life for the dog. Exercise is necessary for dogs, but overdoing it can lead to fatal heart trouble, according to American Veterinary association. Many owners do not realize that there is a definite limit on the amount of physical strain a dog's heart can withstand. Other types of unusual strain likewise may bring on fatal cardiac involvement, as can fever-producing infectious diseases, such as canine distemper. In fact, nearly any serious disease may lead to cardiac ailments. Many types of canine heart disease could be avoided, veterinarians believe, if all owners would follow a "rational schedule" in caring for their pets.
